Corridors and Euribor-€str fair value

We expect the refi-depo corridor to narrow...

We expect the ECB to narrow the refi-depo corridor from 50bp to 25bp as it potentially moves to a demand-driven floor system (see the report, Liquid Insight, 4 March 2024). This means that the cost for banks to borrow reserves from the central bank would decline. It reduces the theoretical cap on Euribor-€str spreads, partly to the extent that the borrowing bank has sufficient collateral to tap into the central bank's lending operations.

... which would reduce the cost of borrowing reserves

We estimate that excess liquidity, as defined by the ECB, will fall to €2.8trn by the end of the year, excluding any additional borrowing by banks from the central bank. We also estimate that banks need between €2.1trn and €3.4trn of reserves based on a scenario analysis for LCR purposes (see Exhibit 1 and the report, European Rates Viewpoint, 21 November 2023). So reserve demand may exceed supply as soon as this year.

Fair value as a weighted average of possible outcomes...

From the same scenario analysis, we plot a probability distribution of reserve demand (Exhibit 2). To derive the fair value of 3M Euribor-€str spread, we use that distribution to assign probabilities to the following outcomes: 1) if demand is greater than supply, the spread would be 25bp, as banks would ultimately need to borrow from the central bank; 2) if supply is as much as €400bn more than demand, then the spread would be 22bp – i.e., comparable to spreads just before the ECB began QE (Exhibit 3); 3) if supply is more than €400bn above demand, then the spread would be 5bp – i.e., close to spot. This gives a fair value of c. 20bp, which is lower than the c. 30bp if the corridor remains at 50bp.

... makes recent Euribor-€str tightening look excessive

Euribor futures versus €str spread tightened significantly since ECB sources signalled the prospect of a narrower refi-depo corridor. The market is pricing in the terminal 3M Euribor futures versus €str spread at c. 10bp. Our interpretation is that this represents either 1) the market assigning almost 100% of a refi-depo corridor of c. 10bp or 2) a meaningful probability that the refi-depo corridor is close to 0bp and some probability of a 25bp corridor. Both would be difficult to justify if the ECB did not want to, at least immediately, become the lender of first resort to banks. It also does not account for any risk of perceived negative stigma that may limit bank usage of such operations.

Price of funding too benign, stay in ERU4-€str wideners

Further details are required to fully assess the market impact of a demand-driven floor system. But price movements suggest that the market's base case has jumped to a very benign scenario whereby the ECB provides very cheap funding operations that may forego market discipline and that is widely used by banks. We stay in ERU4-€str spread wideners (see our 2 February 2024 report; current: 8bp, target: 20bp, stop: 5bp). Risks are that the ECB sets a refi-depo corridor below 25bp, banks use the operations in size and reserve supply remains meaningfully above demand through September 2024, and QT is less than expected.
