SNB Review: another one in June

25bp coming in June

We were expecting the SNB to hike rates by 50bp and to provide a soft signal of, perhaps, more to come. And this is what we got. On top of the 50bp hike, "It cannot be ruled out that a further tightening of monetary policy will be necessary to ensure price stability". Inflation forecast, on average, are at 2% in 2024 and 2025, but they move above that level in 2H25. Also the SNB told us that "price increases are now also broad-based." With SNB's inflation forecasts showing still averaging 2.7% in 2Q23 (not far from our forecasts) we think the SNB will deliver another 25bp hike in the June meeting. That would leave the terminal rate for the SNB at 1.75%.

Balance sheet should help

The key reason we never went for a stronger hiking cycle comparable to other central banks is that we were expecting the SNB to actively use its balance sheet to help with the tightening of conditions. As the SNB stated today "In the fourth quarter of 2022, we sold foreign currency worth around CHF 27 billion... They help to dampen imported inflation". From here, if things remain calm, we would expect that trend to continue. Given the active role of the balance sheet we also avoid going for a bigger hike in June, but another 50bp hike is a real possibility and can't be ruled out today. There is still a long way until the June meeting.

FX: Steadfast SNB

Of all the central banks that may have capitulated on a rate hike, SNB was a potential candidate. However, it duly delivered a 50bps rate hike and the promise of more to come against the backdrop of second round impacts and a tight labour market. We have emphasised on a number of occasions that the SNB is perhaps the most steadfast central bank in G10 in its commitment to its inflation mandate. The tone of the commentary is a clear indication that the SNB wants to take the separation principle as the ECB has, expressing confidence that it has done enough to ring-fence the Swiss banking system. The direction of travel therefore appears to be for further rate hikes but the issue that markets face is the time between now and the next meeting in June. A lot can and probably will happen before then so the question on quantum becomes relevant. We have been discussing the risks for a higher terminal rate beyond 1.5% and this has been crystalised through this meeting. With increasing signs that the SNB is become more active in tapering its (largely FX) balance sheet, we remain constructive on the prospects for CHF through the remainder of the year. EUR/CHF downside may be blunted somewhat by ongoing ECB hawkishness and improvements in the EZ external trade position, but these will likely be offset by an equally resolute SNB and the prospects that selling FX will become an increasingly important pillar for monetary policy.
