Chart book series #90: Land market rekindled in recent weeks

Inter-city trips remained at a high level post-holiday. Inter-city mobility remained robust after the Qingming Festival (April 5), with the Baidu migration index staying well above the 2021-22 level (Exhibit 2) and the number of domestic flights also remaining high at around 12,000 per day. The number of international flights edged up further to 43% of the pre-COVID level (from 41% in the previous week). Intra-city mobility also remained resilient, with daily subway rides in major cities holding up well, especially for tier 2 and 3 cities (Exhibit 3).

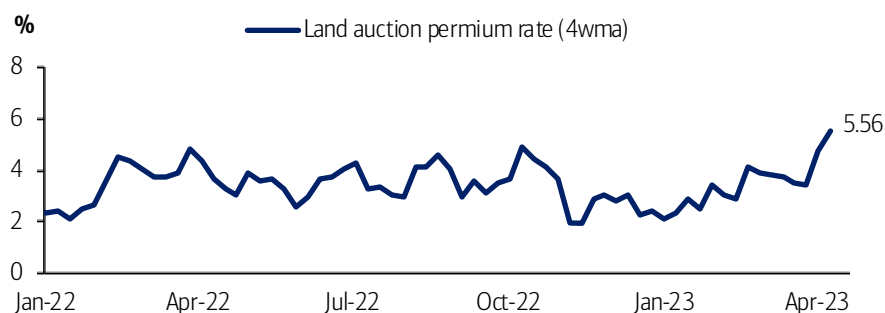

Production activities moderated; auto sales rebounded. High frequency indicators, including both cement shipment ratio and rebar apparent consumption, moderated sequentially in the recent week, whereas the operation rate for TBR and PCR remained resilient. For exports, Shanghai container freight index had bottomed and started to improve in the past two weeks (Exhibit 17), and March's export growth rebounded strongly at 14.8% yoy. Auto sales also picked up notably by 47% yoy during April 1-9 due to the lower year-ago base and rebounded to the 2021 level (Exhibit 12). For services consumption, box office revenue held up in the recent week but was below the 2021 level.

Land market rebounded recently, while home sales moderated. Land transactions in major cities improved in recent weeks, especially for higher-tier cities. In particular, the 4-week average land auction premium rate edged up to 5.56% recently, the highest reading since 2022, suggesting signs of recovery in the land market. That said, developers still faced funding challenges, as net bond issuance in March remained in negative territory, especially for private developers (Exhibit 10). Both new and secondary home sales volume in key cities declined sequentially amid the Qingming Festival, as more potential home buyers travelled elsewhere after the reopening (Exhibit 8 and Exhibit 9).

LGSB issuance is on track; money market liquidity remains ample. LGSB net issuance was RMB1,381bn as of April 12, close to the previous year's pace. The money market also remains stable, as DR007 stayed below the policy rate (7-day OMO rate) in the recent week.
