

Greater China EV and EV battery

Key takeaways: PHEV outgrowth BEV; BYD sales driven by new DM technology in 2024

Industry Overview

PHEV to outgrow BEV; vehicle intelligence competition

On 29 January, we hosted a conference call with Mr. Chang Shu, an online KOL (key opinion leader) in the field of EV. The call focused on China's key EV brands update and industry outlook. We summarize our key takeaways below. Mr. Shu mentioned that NEV volume sales increased by 2.1mn units in 2023, and among EV brands, BYD ranked No.1, with NEV sales increasing by 920k units, and GAC Aion, Li Auto, and Tesla being major contributors for NEV sales growth. In terms of NEV market outlook in 2024, Mr. Shu expects: 1) BEV penetration to increase in A0-class market; 2) PHEV growth to outgrow BEV in C-class and beyond markets; and 3) NEVs with price of RMB200-300k will compete in vehicle intelligence. Mr. Shu also sees more pressure for OEMs that only produce BEVs given hybrid vehicles provide greater growth potential.

BYD: new DM technology to help sales in 2024

Mr. Shu stated that BYD's weekly sales came in at around 40k units in the first three weeks of January, given ICEV provides more discount than NEV to destock inventory, and BYD is likely to widen discount in February to stimulate volume sales. According to Mr. Shu, BYD's current DM technology enables fuel consumption of 4.6-5L/100km, while its fifth-generation DM technology to be launched in March 2024 features fuel consumption of 3.8L/100km, which will drive BYD's sales growth in 2024, given 1) the low fuel consumption will help BYD gain share from Japanese JV's HEVs within the same segment; 2) BYD will provide subsidy for its old-gen products to compete with ICEVs in the same class; and 3) its new products are likely to gain share from B-class ICEVs. In addition, Mr. Shu sees BYD's brand premiumization development on track, and its sales volume contribution from vehicles with price above RMB200k improved from 21% in 2021, to 23%/25% in 2022/2023, respectively. Moreover, Mr. Shu expects Fangchengbao brand's monthly sales to exceed 10k units in 2024, and BYD's total volume sales to be 3.6-4.0mn units in 2024.

Other EV brands: Li Auto, AITO, and Tesla

According to Mr. Shu, Li Auto's weekly sales halved in January due to aggressive pricing strategy and pull forward demand in December 2023. Currently, it offers discounts for old-version models to stimulate sales amid competition from AITO brand. Also, MEGA's pre-sales price is higher than clients' expectation, while its interior design did not meet consumers' expectation. Mr. Shu sees AITO's weekly sales at around 7k units in January, outperforming other EV start-ups, and it secured 30k units new orders in January. For Tesla, Mr. Shu expects flat sales growth in China in 2024, mainly due to limited product upgrade and fierce competition. According to Mr. Shu, Tesla is negotiating with CATL to lower battery cost, which enables TSLA to offer discount to stimulate sales in China. In addition, Tesla's sales in the US are also under pressure as some Model 3 versions are not eligible for IRA tax credit in 2024. He also expects TSLA to face competition from BYD with better cost-performance products in Southeast and Australia markets.

Tier-2 EV start-ups: Leapmotor outperform, Neta weak

For tier-2 EV start-ups, Mr. Shu expects Leapmotor to outperform in 2024, given 1) its successful products upgrade by launching facelifted C01/C11 series and improving products ASP from RMB80k to RMB140-150k in 2023; and 2) overseas market expansion through cooperation with Stellantis. Mr. Shu expects Leapmotor to post 200k units sales in China market in 2024. Additionally, Mr. Shu sees pressure for Nezha Auto to achieve 200k+ units sales target in 2024 (including 100k units export sales), as it failed in brand premiumization, and can only add more channel inventory to push dealers to sell more cars.
