January PCE inflation tracking: Two steps back

PPI tops expectations in January

Continuing the string on strong January inflation data, the Producer Price Index (PPI) topped expectations across the board. Headline rose by 0.3% m/m (consensus: 0.1%), core increased by 0.5% (consensus: 0.1%) and core-core rose by 0.6% (consensus: 0.1%). While January data are often noisy, the inflation data do suggest that disinflation took two steps back in January.

Details for PCE inflation were firm this month

The details of the PPI report that flow through to the calculation of personal consumption expenditures (PCE) inflation were generally firm. PPI for hospitals rose by 0.9% m/m compared to a 0.1% decline in January. Similarly, PPI for physician services rose to 0.59% m/m from 0.08% m/m. Healthcare is a big portion of the translation to PCE. Financial services were also on balance stronger than last month as PPI for portfolio management increased by 5% m/m vs 2.3% m/m previously. Therefore, both healthcare and financial services PCE inflation likely accelerated on the month. PPI for domestic airfares did decline, contrary to the increase in the CPI equivalent. However, that is not large enough to offset the strength elsewhere in the details.

Core PCE likely to print at 0.4% m/m in January

Based on the January PPI and CPI (Consumer Price Index) data, we expect core PCE inflation to print at a soft 0.4% m/m in January (0.37% unrounded). Given our forecast, we see risk that core PCE could round down to 0.3% m/m. But either way, it appears that the wedge between core PCE and core CPI is likely to be small this month. If our forecast proves correct, then the six-month annualized rate of core PCE would likely accelerate from 1.9% to 2.4% and the 3-month annualized rate would pick up from 1.5% to 2.5%. Meanwhile, we expect headline PCE inflation to print at 0.3% m/m (0.33% unrounded), and for the y/y rate to decline by two-tenths to 2.4%.

Vindicated

The January inflation data vindicates the Fed's wait-and-see approach. Services inflation remains sticky, and the Fed would like to see more progress there to have confidence that inflation is returning to its 2% target on a persistent basis. We still expect the Fed to start its cutting cycle in June when it will have four more CPI and employment reports. A May start looks increasingly unlikely.
