UK public sector finances in October: set for undershoot

CGNCR FY-to-October: £12.1bn lower than projected

Today's set of UK public sector finance data suggested the realised CGNCR remained lower than DMO's projection in FY-to-October. The CGNCR came in at £18.2bn in October, £1.9bn above OBR's projection of £16.6bn. But FY-to-October, CGNCR of £105.3bn still stood £12.1bn lower than OBR's projection of £117.4bn. The undershoot narrowed slightly from September's £14.0bn (Exhibit 1).

NS&I FY-to-October: £4.6bn more than the current target

The NS&I monthly flow was £1.9bn in October, down from September's massive inflow of £7.4bn (a near-equivalent of current FY target of £7.5bn and the second largest inflow into NS&I products since the 1980s – Exhibit 2). The withdrawal of September's record 6.2% 1y NS&I deal offer in October explains the monthly slowdown. NS&I amounted to £12.1bn FY-to-October, £4.6bn more than the current target of £7.5bn.

Quarterly APF transfer £9.1bn in October

October's CGNCR was higher than is typical historically (Exhibit 3). One reason is the quarterly capital transfer to the APF to cover realised losses on the BoE QE portfolio over July to September 2023, paid quarterly in arrears (with quarterly capital transfer to APF to cover negative carry included in the PSNB). In October, the transfer was £9.1bn, lower than July's £14.3bn and April's £9.8bn (Exhibit 4). There will be one final payment this FY, in January, that will add to £33.2bn transfer FY-to-October.

FY-to-October borrowing further below OBR forecast

More broadly, borrowing FY-to-date was £81.7bn, £19.8bn below the OBR's March projection. As highlighted by the OBR, data for the first six months of the financial year can be distorted by the usual volatility in receipts and one-offs, but the consistent surpluses against the March profile suggested stronger-than-anticipated growth in nominal tax bases, such as wages and salaries, nominal consumer spending, and profits. This undershoot FY-to-date was partially offset by lower borrowing by public corporations and central government spending.

Rates: NFR likely to be revised lower tomorrow

As outlined in Autumn Statement preview: limited room, 14 November, we expect the DMO to revise 2023/24 NFR slightly lower tomorrow, to be reflected by £8bn cut in Gilt sales and £5bn cut in net T-bill sales. We would expect any larger reduction in NFR, were it to occur, to be implemented largely through changes in planned net T-bill sales to achieve smoother Gilt issuance into fiscal year 2024/25. This would not be unprecedented – for example, the DMO reduced net T-bill sales by £25bn in its October 2021 revision. Our estimates suggest the NFR will rise again in fiscal year 2024/25.

FX: Potential Wiggle Room

Despite this morning's headline numbers, October's public finance data suggests that the Chancellor may have more wiggle room than he had expected. Cumulative data for the seven months of the fiscal year suggest scope for a more aggressive fiscal giveaway than may have been anticipated. In some ways, this reinforces our view that this Statement is unlikely to have a major impact on GBP. The borrowing undershoot implies that the Chancellor will not need to test the boundaries of fiscal discipline in a way that could dislocate UK asset markets as it did in 2022. One might conclude that fiscal stimulus should be GBP supportive as it boosts growth and keeps UK interest rates higher for longer. However, a point worth reinforcing is that this improvement in the UK fiscal outlook will prove temporary as the country continues to be buffeted by structural headwinds. Secondly, any inflationary backlash could trigger a BoE response and reinforce comments by BoE Governor Bailey that rates may have to rise again. Net-net, against this backdrop of uncertainty ahead of the Autumn Statement, we still think it prudent to hedge against potential mistakes, given the complacency in both skew and front-end vol. With one eye on an impending general election and the opinion polls, one might argue that the day of reckoning for GBP may well come at the Spring Budget.
