EUR front-end: fade the rally in Sep23

Sell Sep23 Euribor, to position for higher terminal ECB

It was a close call, but the ECB delivered the 50bp dovish hike that we expected (Liquid Insight, 16-Mar). Even as this surpassed market pricing for the March meeting, the market repriced the peak €str rate lower, to around 3.1% (implying 20bp of hikes from here). The rally occurred following no explicit guidance on the path ahead. The statement and president Lagarde's comments only referred to the dependence on (1) the assessment of the inflation outlook, in light of the incoming economic and financial data, (2) the dynamics of underlying inflation, and (3) the strength of the monetary policy transmission. Financial market developments create uncertainty around (1) and (2).

However, should contagion not spread, our economists' baseline of a 4% terminal rate (which the market was fully pricing a week ago) would still hold. Lagarde herself noted that if their inflation baseline derived early March, just before the events in the banking system, were to hold once the situation stabilises, it would mean more ground has to be covered on the rates front. It is also important that any tightening in lending conditions due to the financial stress may take time to unfold, while inflation remains elevated.

We recommend selling the Sep23 Euribor future to position for a higher terminal ECB rate (currently at 3.23%, targeting 4.25%, with a stop at 2.75%).

Alternatively, one can pay Jul23 ECB date €str at 3.10%, but the position in the Euribor future has the advantage of limiting the downside in case of a significant deterioration in the perceived risks for the European banking system. Indeed, the market would then assume a widening in the spread between Euribor and Overnight Index Swaps, as credit risk gets embedded in Euribor.

The fact that €550bn of TLTRO liquidity has to be repaid at the end of June also makes the Sep23 contract a more attractive short than Jun23. We refrain from going further out into longer-dated contracts as the market can continue to price in rate cuts for late 2023 / early 2024.

The main risk to the trade is additional significant contagion to the European financial system that creates a major confidence and macro-economic shock, pushing the ECB to cut. Another risk is no additional ECB hikes and dramatic liquidity injection that would tighten Euribor-OIS spreads.
