Gilt buying in April: in line with auction and sentiment statistics

£14.6bn of Gilts bought by overseas investors in April

The data for April in today's Bank of England (BoE) Bankstats report revealed that non-residents bought £14.6bn of Gilts in the month, having sold £36.0bn in the first three months of 2023. In addition, foreign investors bought £0.8bn of T-bills and deposited £7.2bn cash with UK Monetary Financial Institutions (MFIs) in April. Domestic non-bank investors continued buying Gilts in April, acquiring £7.5bn, having purchased £63.4bn in the first three months of the year. Domestic banks were marginal buyers also, buying £1.7bn in April, having bought £6.8bn in January-March 2023 (Exhibit 1 and Exhibit 2). Overall, April's Gilt buying of £21.6bn (net of £2.3bn BoE selling) was a close match to DMO's Gilt supply of £21.9bn in April.

Uncertainty over reasons for overseas demand for Gilts

Overseas monthly demand for Gilts has been volatile lately, with the 12-month moving average having dipped into negative territory in March for the first time since 2015 (Exhibit 3). This April's £14.6bn of buying by overseas investors is also the largest April buying since 2000, exceeding the £11.5bn bought in April 2021. The April inflow is also comparable to the amount of buying done in the whole of Q2 in previous years (Exhibit 4). Additionally, strength in trade-weighted GBP (rising 2.37% in April) and oil more than 4% weaker would normally be influences that temper overseas demand in our view. We wonder if US debt ceiling worries might have contributed to the increase, but have no supporting evidence for that theory. Our FX and Rates sentiment (FXRS) survey has been pointing towards more favourable sentiment and positioning on Gilts also, albeit still lagging the US and Europe (Exhibit 5 and Exhibit 6).

We cast doubt on UK's reduced reliance on overseas' bid

Debt Management Office (DMO) supply statistics for April were in line with the Bankstats demand picture for Gilts in April. The syndicated launch of UKTI 2045 on 26 April raised £4.5bn (in value terms), and the DMO noted that 93% of the issue has been taken by the UK domestic market. We have also highlighted recently that the DMO Gilt auction results have been on the stronger side, chiming with the possibility of short-covering and/or Gilt longs being initiated, as hinted at by our FXRS Survey results (UK rates forecast update: taking stock after inflation surprise, 26 May, Exhibit 7 and Exhibit 8). Big picture, in our view, remains unchanged: we would cast doubt on signs of reduced Gilt reliance on the "kindness of strangers". It is hard to believe an effective net 2023 supply of Gilts equivalent to 8%/GDP (DMO and BoE combined) can be met without heavy overseas involvement. Reversion to the norm of a larger current account deficit and reliance upon the kindness of strangers seems inevitable.
